A Year of Disasters.

The present year will go down into history as a period of great disasters. Nature has been on a rampage, so to speak and the consequent destruction of life and property has been enormous. The eruption of Vesuvius, the earthquakes which wrecked San Francisco and Valparaiso, the typhoons which have raged through the China seas, the storms which have devastated the countries of the Caribbean Sea and the Gulf of Mexicothese are but a few of the unusual manifestations of natural energy which have

In the midst of all these things, humanliterature, while discovery has followed discovery and there seems to be no limit to inventive genius, no one has yet been able to harness or direct the tremendous forces of nature. We can predict storms, but we cannot control them; we can register the occurrence of earthquakes, but them. Perhaps some of these days the of support not on his own account, but upon imaginary pie.

Ill-lighted and Dirty Streets.

It never once occurred to our municipal fathers that Washington is an ill-lighted city until The Herald mentioned the matter. People have been groping about uncomplainingly, and the Commissioners knew nothing about it. Having received no complaints, how should they know? Certain experiments are going on, we now learn, which they supposed were satisfactory. There are arc lights here and there, incandescent lights at given points elsewhere, while over in Georgetown the flat-flame burner has been replaced with a new gas lamp; and everything is lovely, so far as official knowledge extends, and Washington is as well lighted a city as Kalamazoo, Paterson, N. J., or any other metropolis. On purely aesthetic grounds, there is a thought thanks to Mr. Macfarland's observations in Paris, of some time recommending a town section; but, no complaints coming in, the estimates and the door of hope have been closed, so far as general conditions are concerned.

The Herald is glad it spoke. It is going to furnish enlightenment on variou other topics from time to time, and it cherishes the hope that, ultimately, this community will be cured of the habit of patiently accepting and submitting to conditions simply because they exist.

Washington is a model city in many respects, but not in all respects, as has of it, but not as proud as we should like to be. Every section of the citystreets enveloped in gloom, official exing. The Commissioners themselves have but to take a turn about town any night to convince themselves of the fact.

But this is not all. The streets them chronic? We await the answer.
